PREFACE

This bibliography includes a selection of government documents, books, periodicals, and maps on Africa's newest nation, the Republic of South Sudan. The list is based on the Library of Congress' Africana Collections. Within each subject the entries are arranged alphabetically by personal or corporate author or title. The call number appears on a separate line beneath the main body of the entry.

HISTORICAL NOTE

South Sudan, officially the Republic of South Sudan, is a landlocked country located in East-Central Africa. Some 619,745 km² in area, the Republic of South Sudan shares borders with Sudan to the north, Ethiopia to the east, Kenya and Uganda to the southeast, the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the southwest, and the Central African Republic to the west.

South Sudan has had a turbulent history, one linked fundamentally to its northern neighbor, the Republic of Sudan. Historically, the relationship between the two nations has been defined by the religious and ethnic differences that characterize the Sudanese populations, for the Northern Sudan is home to Islamized Arabs while the Southern Sudan is home to Black African Christian and animist populations. These distinctions crystallized under joint Anglo-Egyptian rule (1899-1956). Within this colonial framework, the southern region of Sudan featured marginally in metropolitan strategic and economic calculations and, as the North modernized under the Condominium regime, the South grew proportionately underdeveloped in comparison. This push to the periphery culminated in the Southern Policy. Designed by the British to safeguard the Southern Black African provinces from exploitation by the Northern Arabs, the policy erected social, economic, and political barriers behind which the South's underdevelopment ossified.

At the end of the Second World War, Great Britain was no longer able to maintain its position as a global power. With decolonization and independence looming, the British in 1947 abrogated the Southern Policy. In doing so, they removed all economic, social, and political barriers between the Northern and Southern Sudan and implemented a plan to rapidly develop the South and bring it to parity with the North. This program failed, and at independence in 1956 a modern Northern Sudan was united with a comparatively underdeveloped Southern Sudan.

Decades of marginalization and a historic concern over exploitation created circumstances that exploded in 1955. That year, the late-colonial Sudanese state erupted into the first of two enduring civil wars. The Addis Ababa Peace Agreement of 1972, which guaranteed the South's regional autonomy within the framework of a unified Sudanese state, brought the First Sudanese Civil War to an end. The government's decision in 1983 to impose shari'a law on Sudan sundered the peace agreement and reignited the North-South conflict, which that same year escalated into the Second Sudanese Civil War. This war lasted over two decades and came to an end with the signing of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (C.P.A.) in 2005.¹ The C.P.A. gave the people of the South the right to decide by referendum whether to remain in a United Sudan or become independent.

A referendum was held the week of January 9, 2011, during which the majority of Southerners voted to de-link the South from the North.² In accord with these results, the South became the independent South Sudan on July 9, 2011.

² According to the South Sudan Referendum Commission (S.S.R.C.), 98.8% of the votes cast were in favor of independence.
